

Composition on Traveling

Introduction: traveling means going from one place to another or from one country to another country. Some people travel for pleasure, some for education and again some other for business. There were Robbers and Pirates in every country. We can learn from the history of the famous travelers as to how much difficult it was at that time. The name of the traveler Ibn-e-Battuta is immortal.

Traveling in ancient times: In ancient times, traveling was troublesome due to want of communication facilities. There were no trains and steamers. There were no good roads. People had to go from one place to another on foot. It was not safe to make a long journey.

Traveling in nowadays: nowadays traveling is easier. The invention of modern science has made it cheap, quick and pleasant. It has become possible to travel a long distance within a short time. Trains and steamers have been introduced to carry passengers and goods from one place to another rapidly.

Benefits of traveling/uses/utility: there are many benefits of traveling. A man who sets out on a journey many studies the manners and customs of different nations. He may visit new places and sees new sights. It gives him practical knowledge. He cannot gather it by reading books in school and colleges. Traveling is also good for health.

Its educative value/traveling as a part of education: traveling is an essential part of education. It increases our knowledge of different activities by traveling. Education to its complete sense may be acquired if a man visits important places of the world. Traveling enables a man that new scenery, works, and objects of historical interest

Conclusion: traveling is so pleasing and beneficial that everyone should take the opportunity of traveling. Of course, everybody cannot make the long journey. He may not afford to spend the money which it requires.