

Composition The Village Fair I have Recently Enjoyed/Visited

Introduction: A village fair is a partisan parcel of our culture. In fact, a village fair or A Village Market bears an age-old tradition in the culture of Bangladesh. No other festival in rural Bangladesh is flamboyant as A Village Fair. Usually, it is held on the first day of the Bengali new year known as Pahela Boishakh.

My Participation: I had a great desire to visit a village fair. At last, my desire had come true when I went to visit my grandfather and grandmother living at Laksmipur in the district of Madaripur. On that day I got up early and went to the fair with my cousins. It was held in the local bazaar of the village. Being there I was astonished to see the festive mood among all the people irrespective of age, sex, race, and religion.

Arrangement: It was an arrangement of selling and buying, gambling, jugglery, and cultural functions. The stalls of the fair were decorated and arranged according to the articles. Shopkeepers, artists, and artisans set up their stalls with goods such as toys, sweet-meats, cosmetics, handicrafts, tapestries, bamboo-made goods, and many other attractive items. Merry-go-round, puppet show, magic show, and circus were special attractions of the fair. A circus party brought tigers, elephants, monkeys, and bears to entertain the viewers.

Amusements: Children and teenage boys and girls were highly amused. They enjoyed the fair to a great extent. They bought fancy goods like bangles, ribbons, bamboo flutes, balloons, etc. They also bought sweetmeats and earth-made dolls. They rode the merry-go-round and enjoyed a puppet show. I myself also enjoyed all these things to a great extent.

Conclusion: The fair was very crowded and not so tidy. Nevertheless, I enjoyed the fair to a great extent.
