

Essay on All that Glitter is not Gold

Guided by the appearance can be disastrous. In this world of deception and deceit, what is seen outwardly, is not the reality. Often the glittering appearance hides the foulness of wickedness. When advertisements display, showiness, has all become the day of life and the judgment of reality has become very difficult. The good-looking innocent people are the perfect cheat of the day. The only way to save ourselves from such hypocrites is to be very attentive and careful in life with good observance.

What is exhibited and displayed outwardly should not be taken, as creditworthy? Visual appearance is commonly deceptive. The quality of a thing can only be judged by its use only, In many cases, a thing that appears to be very durable and cheap may turn out a duplicate. Duplicates or imitations commonly have more shining or glittering or than the original one.

A person can be judged by his deeds, attitude, and aptitude towards show off others. A coarse man may be more helpful and cooperative than a person of pleasant countenance. A well-dressed, gentlemanly-looking person is apt to deceive you by his outwards looks. What he intends to show, may not be his actual intentions. Appearance may be delusory and misleading. In the present world of advertisements and propaganda whatever is reported through advertisements is generally turnout be a farce. Every beauty cream available in the market claims to beautify the body, claims to convert black skin into fair-colored skin within two to three months. Is it possible? One should be aware of such misleading advertisements.

Mr. Natwar Lal, a notorious cheat, became successful only because people had believed his outward appearances. We hear several cases in which the coins of brass are sold claiming them as gold and people are cheated by the innocent outlook of the seller.

In the present materialistic world, most of the actions of people are self-centered, for the utter benefit of self, with total disregard to the losses or benefits of others. Persons projecting themselves as your well-wishers, your friends must be judged very carefully.

Don't trust just the sayings or outlook or appearance of anybody, it may be a cruel cheat, a tricky fellow, a Charles Sobhraj, a Natwar Lal. Try to ascertain his motives, and analyze his actions. Keep a close vigil. What appears to be gold, may turn out a yellow metal, a polish of gold on iron, a fake color. of gold on brass. So beware of the appearance, judge the things from their original contents, "All that glitter is not Gold".
