Question: A fair is an occasional event. A fair is usually held in an open space in which communication is easy. People from many places come to a fair to buy as well as to sell. Usually, it is held on occasions like the Bengali New Year's Day, the 21st of February, and then I'd Day. A village fair is a gay affair. I have been to such fairs several times in my life. It was held in the Public Library Premises in Rangpur town. On the occasion of the 1st Baishakh, I visited the fair. I was accompanied by two of my bosom friends. There were different types of stalls in different rows, such as book stalls, stalls for dolls and toys, electronic goods, handmade goods, etc. All the stalls were almost crowded. We moved around the fair and enjoyed it very much. My friends and I rode on merry-go-rounds. I bought some toys for my younger sister. Having some Junk food, we came back home. It was very enjoyable for us.

A Fair That I Visited

During the last summer vacation, I visited a village fair. The fair was held on the occasion of Pahela Baishakh. It was held at Narayanpur beside the Rupsa River. I went there with my father. I saw there a large collection of village handicrafts like pots, smith's tools, toys, paintings, and so on. I bought some sweets, some toys, and some books. I felt very excited and happy there. I rode the merry-go-round. I took part in shooting the balloons with air guns. I rode on horseback. I played computer games etc. I enjoyed the fair freely and nicely. It was the first month of the Bangla New Year. Many important people came to visit the fair. A village fair plays an important role in the village economy. The sanitation and hygienic state of the fair was somewhat satisfactory. Many things were available at the fair. The memory of them will remain ever fresh in my mind.
