

Paragraph on An Airport

An airport is a landing and taking off area of the planes. It is a station and parking zone for the airbuses. Planes come here from all over the world and go there continuously. It is a very reserved and conservative area. It has a very strong security. It is conducted by the government or authority. No one can exit or enter into it without the permission of the authority. It has a passenger terminal and some runways. It has also many checking posts, lounge rooms, control rooms, guardrooms, etc. It is also a mending or repairing workshop for the planes. Planes take their fuel and many other necessary things from here. It should be a high land. Water does not flood here during the rainy season. Every country has some international airports. It plays a vital role in the field of international relations.