

Paragraph on Dignity of Labor

Labor is the most valuable powerful element of success in life. If we make a list of successful persons who have acquired a high degree of proficiency in their respective vocations, we will find their success depends mainly upon this great virtue. Though it is a mental faculty and an invisible quality, yet its effect is greatly felt. It too is be prized on its own account. It brings great rewards for human life. Without it a man cannot accomplish anything great or glorious in life. In its absence, a man loses every charm of life and all other virtues and thus becomes unfit for useful existence. In a word, those who have risen in their respective vocations have done simply by dint of it. Therefore, everybody should have it at cost and the earlier the better. Because habit formed in childhood is never lost and has borne its fruits in the long run.
