Why do you prefer e-mail to telex?

Why is e-mail somewhat difficult to maintain in a developing country like ours?

Question: 'E-mail' means electronic mail. This system is faster than any other communication system. On the other hand, telex is a primitive communication system that takes a long time and more money. As a result, everyone of this age prefers 'E-mail' to telex. But there are some problems with using 'E-mail' in a developing country, 'E-mail' is used through a computer. In a developing country, there are few people who can buy a computer, let alone the necessary accessories to use 'E-mail'. In some cases, the government provides funds but that is not enough. Another problem is that very few people know the technical know-how of the computer. Unfortunately, most of the literate people in our country are not very good at English. If a developing country could overcome these problems, every person, using, telex, would start using 'e-mail'.
