

Paragraph on Summer Season in Bangladesh

Summer in Bangladesh is characterized by scorching heat and high temperatures, creating an atmosphere of warmth and humidity. This season typically spans from March to June, bringing with it clear skies and abundant sunshine. The average temperature during summer often rises above 30 degrees Celsius (86 degrees Fahrenheit), and in some regions, it can even soar higher. The days are long and the nights relatively warm, making it a time when people seek relief from the heat in various ways. The rural landscapes are adorned with lush greenery, and the agricultural fields are in full bloom as farmers cultivate crops like rice, jute, and sugarcane. Despite the intense heat, summer is also a time for vibrant cultural celebrations and festivals. People indulge in refreshing beverages like sugarcane juice and coconut water to stay hydrated. Many embrace traditional clothing, with light and breathable fabrics, to cope with the heat. Despite the challenges, summer in Bangladesh brings a unique charm and a sense of unity as communities come together to celebrate the richness of their culture amidst the warmth of the season.

Or,

Short Paragraph on Summer Season in Bangladesh

There are six seasons in Bangladesh. Each season has its features. We hear new sounds and enjoy new scenes in each season. The first season in Bengali Calendar is the summer. Baisakh and Jaistha constitute summer. During summer the sun shines hotly. The heat is terrible water goes dry, and ponds, canals, lakes, and small rivers go dry. There is a scarcity of water everywhere. People cannot work easily. Summer is also the season of various fruits. Various seasonal fruits are ripe then. Sometimes “Kailbaishakhi” sweeps over the country. It causes harm and renders many people homeless.